COLLEGE FOOTBALL USA TODAY SPORTS’ ANNUAL SURVEY OF ASSISTANT COACH COMPENSATION

Five most overpaid assistant coaches

Lindsay Schnell
USA TODAY

’Tis the season for college football coaches hirings and firings. Or maybe it’s more accurate to say it used to be the season for coaches hirings and firings.

The college football landscape looks dramatically different in 2024 than it did just a few years ago. With the advent of NIL and booster-run collectives, coupled with looming revenue sharing, schools have started to shift their focus when it comes to how they dole out money for winning football teams.

In the past, the highest earners on teams were coaches – by a long shot. And while that’s still true for now, schools are starting to prioritize putting money toward their roster as opposed to their coaching staff.

How else do you explain Florida coach Billy Napier hanging on to his job when the Gators had amassed a 4-4 record midway through the season? In a statement that likely portends the future, Florida athletic director Scott Stricklin told fans on Nov. 7 that Napier would continue as UF’s coach amid speculation that he was about to be shown the door. (Napier’s buyout is more than $26 million.) USA TODAY NETWORK columnist Blake Toppmeyer described it as a “flimsy endorsement.” The Gators have since become bowl eligible, but the reality is that to build a program that can contend for College Football Playoff berths, Florida needs to spend its money on top prospects; it also knows stability goes a long way with recruits.

Often at this point, with bowl season right around the corner, underachieving coaches would be looking for work. So far this year, there have been just four Power Four openings – North Carolina, UCF, Purdue and West Virginia – and there are now two left after UCF rehired Scott Frost and Purdue hired UNLV’s Barry Odom.

But numerous programs already are reevaluating what assistants are making, and a handful already have been shown the door.

USA TODAY Sports analyzes the five most overpaid college football assistant coaches:

(Fired coaches were not eligible for the list, though getting paid to do nothing – like former Florida State defensive coordinator Adam Fuller – would qualify as peak overpaid. Tony Gibson took the job as head coach at Marshall after the season ended.)

1. Blake Baker, LSU, defensive coordinator

Compensation: $2.5 million

Good golly, this guy could make an argument to take up all five spots. Consider that Baker, 42, is the highest paid assistant in the country ... and his team finished the regular season 8-4. Worse, he is presumably being paid $2.5 million to put together a stout defense, but the Tigers rank 52nd – 52nd! – in total defense. Surely being ranked that low contributed to their 5-3 finish in the SEC and another missed playoff opportunity under head coach Brian Kelly. Giving up 38 to Texas A&M and 42 to Alabama, both losses, is a good way to make this list.

But it’s even worse when you remember that LSU paid Missouri $950,000 to cover Baker’s buyout when it hired him in January. Add that LSU owed his predecessor Matt House about $3.7 million and, well, accountants in the Tigers athletic department can’t be happy. (House was hired by the Jacksonville Jaguars as an inside linebackers coach, which offset some of his buyout.)

2. Tony Gibson, N.C. State, defensive coordinator

Compensation: $1.5 million

Did you know the 6-6 Wolfpack had one of the highest paid assistant coaches in the country? Yeah, we’re as perplexed as you. Gibson, in his fourth year at North Carolina State, was being paid a lot of money to put together a top defense. But the Wolfpack finished the regular season ranked 84th in the country and barely made a bowl game. Gibson, who may have felt some pressure to move on, probably is taking a pay cut to be head coach at Marshall.

Ohio State offensive coordinator Chip Kelly watches warm-ups before the game against Indiana on Nov. 23. He is among USA TODAY Sports’ most overpaid college football assistant coaches. ADAM CAIRNS/THE COLUMBUS DISPATCH – USA TODAY NETWORK

No. 3 Morgan Scalley, Utah, defensive coordinator

Compensation: $2 million

Well, this is awkward. Not only is Scalley overpaid when you consider Utah’s abysmal year – the Utes missed a bowl game for the first time since 2013, finishing 5-7 – but in the summer, Utah revealed that Scalley is the coach-in-waiting whenever Kyle Whittingham steps down. The Utes did not rank higher than No. 30 in total defense. Yikes.

Andy Ludwig, another candidate for this list considering his $2,050,000 salary, resigned as the Utes’ offensive coordinator in October. While it’s true many of their problems this year go back to a banded-up roster, the reality is, if you’re going to make $2 million annually, you need to be playing in the postseason annually, too.

No. 4 Chip Kelly, Ohio State offensive coordinator

Current compensation: $2 million

Win the one game you’re supposed to win (vs. Michigan) and you don’t make this list. Continually lose that game – especially in a year when you are absolutely the more talented team – and people are going to start looking hard at payroll. Chip Kelly has long been considered one of the more brilliant offensive minds in college football and while his offense isn’t as innovative or unstoppable under head coach Ryan Day, it should at least be able to hang more than 10 points on OSU’s biggest rival.

No. 5 Wink Martindale, Michigan, defensive coordinator

Compensation: $2.3 million

This one is a little tricky. Defending national champion Michigan finished the regular season ranked No. 15 in total defense, which isn’t terrible, but also isn’t good for one of the highest paid assistants in the country – especially when you consider that Martindale returned to the college ranks after making headlines with his NFL defenses, particularly with the Baltimore Ravens. Martindale is due for a substantial raise ($200,000) each year of his three-year contract, which runs through Jan. 10, 2027.

It’s worth pointing out that a lot of the Wolverines’ problems go back to former coach Jim Harbaugh, who jumped ship for the NFL in late January, which put Michigan in a bind. Still, when you add it up for Martindale, it doesn’t look good for someone whose team is 7-5, a considerable tumble for the 2023 titlist. Of course, beating your archrival during a season when you have no business doing so always makes fans and administrators appreciate you more.

Also considered: Brad White, Kentucky defensive coordinator; Pete Golding, Mississippi defensive coordinator; Joe Rossi, Michigan State defensive coordinator; Brian Hartline, Ohio State co-offensive coordinator and wide receivers; Kane Wommack, Alabama defensive coordinator.

2-time Cup winner Sauerbrunn retires

Jason Anderson

For the U.S. women’s national team, the end of an era arrived as longtime captain Becky Sauerbrunn announced her retirement from professional soccer. Sauerbrunn, 39, confirmed the end of one of the great careers in American soccer with a post on her Instagram account Tuesday. In her 219 appearances with the USWNT, Sauerbrunn was a key part of the World Cup winning teams in 2015 and 2019 and won three NWSL championships at the club level. “All I can do is hope that you got to share in some of the joy I felt every time I stepped onto a field – that you got to dream with me, even if just for a little while,” wrote Sauerbrunn in her farewell message. “This isn’t the end. I’ll be around. I love this game too much to leave it for good. But for the first time in sixteen years I’m going to find a quiet moment and close my eyes for a bit.”

Beyond her presence as a stabilizing force at center back, where her ability to read the game was essential for one of the best stretches of USWNT success, Sauerbrunn was a critical voice as the players pushed for for equal pay.

Major impact on USWNT

Before she even played professional club soccer, Sauerbrunn made her USWNT debut in January 2008 thanks to standout performances at the U.S. youth national team level and in college with the Virginia Cavaliers. The St. Louis native joined the Washington Freedom shortly thereafter, carrying on with the team in 2009 when it joined Women’s Professional Soccer (WPS), one of two fledgling pro leagues that came before the NWSL started in 2013. Despite the early look, Sauerbrunn’s ascension to the USWNT didn’t truly start in earnest until 2010 as the team went through World Cup qualifying. The defender wasn’t an immediate starter, but she made a critical appearance in the 2011 World Cup semifinals and appeared at the 2012 Olympics in London, where the USWNT won the gold medal. From 2013 through 2022, Sauerbrunn took on more of a vital role with the USWNT as part of a new generation of players that took the team back to the top of international soccer. Sauerbrunn was first choice for the World Cup-winning sides in 2015 and 2019, as well as on the 2016 and 2020 Olympic teams. Off the field, Sauerbrunn was crucial in the USWNT’s drive for equal pay. She was one of five players to file an Equal Employment Opportunity Commission complaint over the pay disparity between the men’s and women’s national teams and served as the U.S. Women’s National Team Players Association’s first president. In September 2022, the USWNTPA and U.S. Soccer reached a collective bargaining agreement, with Sauerbrunn signing the official documents on the field following a friendly in Washington, D.C. Meanwhile, as the NWSL kicked off in 2013, Sauerbrunn emerged as a star in the league, winning two titles with FC Kansas City. She would add a third championship in 2022, this time as a veteran leader with the Portland Thorns. Sauerbrunn’s seven appearances on the league’s Best 11 are a record, as are her four Defender of the Year awards.

Clark’s college coach: Cover criticism ‘silly’

Jason Anderson
USA TODAY

Caitlin Clark’s college coach Lisa Bluder thinks it’s time for everyone around the WNBA – including Washington Mystics co-owner Sheila Johnson – to “embrace” how Clark’s stardom has provided a boost for women’s basketball. Following a 2024 WNBA Rookie of the Year season with the Indiana Fever, Clark was named Time magazine’s Athlete of the Year, a decision Johnson, the billionaire founder of BET network, said she disagreed with. In an interview this week with CNN Sports, Johnson said “the structure of the way media plays out race” was a factor in Clark receiving the honor and argued that Time should have instead “put the whole WNBA on that cover, and said the WNBA is the League of the Year.” Speaking with USA TODAY’s Sports Seriously, Bluder – who retired in May after 24 seasons coaching at Iowa, where Clark played from 2020 to 2024 – disagreed, insisting Clark’s impact on women’s sports is historic. “It’s silly to me that anybody’s trying to take away from something that’s so good in your sport right now,” she said. “(Clark) is a person that’s really helped athletics, helped women’s sports in a way that nobody has helped women’s sports, maybe since Billie Jean King.” Johnson’s point is a nuanced one, and in the same interview the Mystics co-owner credited Clark for using her Time interview to call for more attention for the WNBA’s Black players. “It has taken the WNBA almost 28 years to get to the point where we are now,” explained Johnson. “It’s just not Caitlin Clark, it’s (Angel) Reese. We have so much talent out there that has been unrecognized, and I don’t think we can just pin (the league’s rise) on one player. ... “I feel really bad because I’ve seen so many players of color that are equally as talented, and they never got the recognition that they should have. And I think right now, it is time for that to happen.” Bluder’s position appears to be that a rising tide will lift all and the entire WNBA will benefit from Clark’s fame. “Let’s get on the bandwagon and help her out, make her life a little bit easier, because she is helping all of us,” said Bluder. “Sometimes, you know, we used to tell our team, ‘listen when, when Caitlin’s light shines on her, it shines on all of us.’ And I think everybody else needs to embrace that a little bit better.”
